Technology helps detectives warm up to cold case
Identification of Wendover woman’s body provides answers to some questions in 12-year-old mystery
by Lisa Christensen

After more than a decade, Wendover’s Ramirez family got the confirmation they were looking for: the 30-year-old mother of three died of a likely suicide in July 1998.

Ramirez, a Wendover resident, was reported missing by family members in October 1998. Her remains were found by a group of Wendover employees on a remote part of the company’s land near the Utah-Nevada border last June. Bodies came back Tuesday from a forensics lab in Texas that tested a portion of Ramirez’s right leg believed to contain mitochondrial DNA from Ramirez’s leg bone believed to contain Ramirez’s mitochondrial DNA. It is possible to see whether the mitochondrial DNA matched Ramirez’s.

According to the detectives, they had two reasons to locate Ramirez. "They had no reason to believe anyone would see or know her, so we decided to check the area. We found a lot of bone, so we went back to the site to find her," said Lt. Spencer Topping of the Tooele County Sheriff’s Office. "We told them, ‘it took 15 years to find it and he or she might take a while to reside this case.’" The detectives said Ramirez died open a new chapter for the family. "I think they were relieved it was just the end of a case because instead of wondering if she’s still out there and it’s just a case-contacting with them,” said Lt. Topping.

The Sheriff’s Office of the Tooele County Sheriff’s Office. It opens a new chapter for law enforcement, as well.

According to officials, the evidence was collected and led to the conclusion that the body was found in 1998, the case was closed. According to the Sheriff’s Office, the evidence was collected and led to the conclusion that the body was found in 1998, the case was closed.

In matters of health, it's good to have role models

I never got roses or give away a box of goodies on Valentine’s Day, as the day of love approaches. I can think of two people who seem to embody the special nature of the holiday around my parents. My parents met on a blind date. Neither of them wanted to be set up by their friends. They agreed to a second date. By the time the fourth date came around, she decided she really liked him.

They were married on Groundhog Day just celebrating their 30th wedding anniversary last week. Realizing you might be two completely different people — my mom nearly faked physics in college and my dad has a physics background — but having the same basic values is one of the secrets to being happily married for so long, according to my mom.

Another think about the other person in the relationship first. Observing my parents, I know this is key.

And, it’s the little things that count. Like always knowing hello and good-byes in the mornings and evenings, and constantly holding hands. My dad always quote my favorite car door for her, proving chivalry is not dead. She’s so nice to know that some things in this modern world would have left my parents uninsured.

It seems my parents can make anything romantic. After all, they were in Death Valley on their honeymoon.

Like my dad says, with a start like that there’s nowhere to go but up.

If it happens here, read about it here.

Stansbury woman teaches others through LDS blog

by Courtney Croody

A Stansbury Park woman is making the lessons, songs and scriptures she’s collected during her lifetime available on a blog for members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

Carmila Whitman’s blog, TeachLDSDHellsmiths.com, features 23 different categories of lessons and scriptures and is populated with notes and scripture references to primary and youth lessons.

Whitman said she hopes to help other primary leaders and parents find creative and entertaining ways to teach their children.

“I want people to have joy in their lives, and the gospel teaches us how to do that,” Whitman said. She began blogging several years ago, but said the blog has skyrocketed in membership recently.

“I get about 6,000 hits a month nowadays. I think most of the hits are from people who have missed in primary. They’re looking for the lessons, the songs. The comments and requests for help are very kind,” she said.

Her husband John have been married for 27 years and raised two children.

They moved to Stansbury Park 24 years ago when he was transferred to a job at the Val- mart Distribution Center in Salina.

The blog has lessons Whitman has written herself.

“I started collecting things when I was young because I love to use a variety of teaching options. I think it’s important for kids to see visual aids and games when I teach,” said Whitman.

She said she’s happy to help Balletts about them on the blog. When she finds a new lesson or technique, she shares that information with them.

Whitman’s current calling is to be a primary character, so her blog has been focusing on primary songs of late. She is trying to find the best ways to teach children, even with all that water damage activity going on, to do less talking and emphasize the meaning behind the words. One of the best ways, she said, is to help children learn while they’re playing. Children are being raised in a fast-paced world and have trouble sitting still. She finds that using a song tied to the activity helps.

“The goal is to get them to think through the process of the activity, and then to appreciate and understand what we are trying to teach,” she said. For example, if a person is counting money, she’ll have them count in groups to think about the value of the money. She’s encouraging them to think more about the things they love to do, activities that will be meaningful to them.

In the future, Whitman said she hopes to add more visuals and sound effects to the blog to help children learn new lessons.

We’ve planted seeds that grow our community

On the banks of the Jordan River sits the Kennecott Nature Center – right in the center of wetland, dryland and aquatic ecosystems. Since 1999, more than 70,000 children in the Murray School District have participated in hands-on learning at the Center. They enhance their understanding of the environment while collecting seeds, observing wildlife, exploring habitat and studying the natural world around them. The Kennecott Nature Center is a long-standing partnership between the Murray Education Foundation and Kennecott Utah Copper.

We are proud of this partnership and many others like it such as those with the Utah Museum of Natural History, the Tracy Aviary, the University of Utah and the Road Home. We truly believe we are part of something bigger. That is why we offer funding to local non-profit community organizations throughout the year from our Kennecott Utah Copper Corporate Giving Program and the Bingham Canyon Mine Visitors Center Charitable Foundation. This is nothing new; we’ve been doing it for more than a century.

Corporate giving

• Kennecott actively participates with local communities by supporting projects that promote long-term, mutual benefit to the communities where we operate.
• Kennecott supports organizations that focus on civic and community development, education, and the environment.
• Rio Tinto’s Kennecott Corporate Giving Program is now accepting applications for 2011.
• Applicants must be non-profit organizations in Salt Lake or Tooele counties.

Details of the electronic application process can be found at www.kennecott.com.

Deadlines for Corporate giving applications:
Community and civic: March 30, 2011
Education: June 30, 2011
Environmental: September 30, 2011

Foundation giving

• The Kennecott Utah Copper Visitors Center Charitable Foundation raises money for local charities through tax-deductible entrance fees to the Bingham Canyon Mine Visitors Center and through donations from Rio Tinto employees.
• The Foundation is a non-profit entity giving funds exclusively to local charities focusing on children, veterans, disabled, homeless and senior citizens.
• The Foundation, with a donation from the Bingham Canyon Lion’s Club gift shop, donated $186,000 to support 106 local community charities in 2010.

‘Gnomeo & Juliet’ bastardizes one of Shakespeare’s most beloved plays

Shakespeare is definitely the quintessential playwright. The release of “Gnomeo & Juliet” — one and only — was expected to be met with laughter like the films tagline suggests. Film industry insiders never knew, considering that it took more than a decade. The one and only humorous joke was the line “Out, damn, damn, damn!”

“Romeo and Juliet” was a good play by nine individuals only. The rest of the script by nine individuals only makes it that much worse. ‘Gnomeo & Juliet’ was a good rip-off. ‘Romeo and Juliet’ was a good play. It had a message. It had a point. It was well written from beginning to end. “Gnomeo & Juliet” is completely unnecessary for the form of R-rated film referential humor being made into anything other than what it was written for — especially if it was a film using garden gnomes.

At about this time of year in 1911, people were getting pretty hungry for a steady supply of tasty fresh vegetables. Shipping in the early years of the 20th century weren’t what they are today and vegetables that were shipped to markets in cold areas had been picked for several days before they arrived in the grocery stores. The vegetables tucked away in the root cellar were no longer at their prime by mid-February either.

A hundred years later, in February 2011, fresh vegetables...

Friends & family are welcome to attend!

The AAS committee has announced three vegetable winners for 2011:

Pumpkin ‘Hijinks’

Pumpkins, Cucurbita pepo, are always a favorite garden crop — especially when kids are involved. Watching the green shoots that develop and gradually turn orange generates all kinds of excitement. ‘Hijinks’ produces small-sized, deep orange, 6- to 7-pound fruits of a uniform size and shape with distinctive grooves — just exactly what is needed for holloween carving. Although these fruits are easy to remove from the plant, the sticky stamens are well attached to the fruit — perfect for kids who like to carry their pumpkins around, and to serve as a handle for the jack-o’-lantern lid. The pumpkin generally matures in about 100 days from transplant and is resistant to cracking than some other varieties. ‘Hijinks’ produces prolifically and is resistant to the powdery mildew that is a frequent problem here. Allow plenty of space in a full sun location for the vines that spread up to 15 feet. Allow about 10 feet between rows of plants spaced 2 to 3 feet apart in the row. Plan to harvest it about 100 days from sowing seed or 95 days from transplant.

Tomato ‘Lizzano’

‘Lizzano’ is a 2011 AAS winner. ‘Lizzano’ is semi-determinate, it will produce fruits that are more resistant to cracking than some others and continues to produce all through the heat. ‘Lizzano’ is bred by Pro-Veg Seeds Ltd.

‘Lizzano’ was bred by Sakata Seed America, Inc. The closest comparisons on market are ‘Orange Smoothings’ and Hybrid Tom.

Tomato ‘Lizzano’

Tomatoes, Solanum lycopersicum, are among gardeners’ favorite summer plants. ‘Lizzano’ is a semi-determinate variety that doesn’t try to take over the back yard. In fact, it is compact and uniform, which makes it perfect for patio containers or hanging baskets. Despite its compact habit, it is nicely suited to garden growing but will benefit from some pruning nevertheless. These tough plants grow 16 to 20 inches tall and generally spread only 20 inches. But the same producer, due to quality, rigorous standards for breeding, ‘Lizzano’ is expected to do well in your garden and supply you with excellent produce through the years.

Once upon a time a merchant came upon hard times, and one day he discovered he had only three gold coins remaining. He thought long and hard about what he would do with his money. He could not sleep or eat, so he addressed him of his misfortune, and at last he left his family and fled from his village. He joined that God would look after his family, and when night fell, he reached a poor village. He prayed that God would watch over his family, and soon he came upon a poor man, a dervish who made his home in the forest.

"Why you," the dervish said, "what are you seeking in the forest? You look veryiled." "I came to seek my fortune," the merchant announced. "I was a wealthy man, but I have only three coins left to my name, and do not know what to do." Naturally the dervish understood, for he had taken a vow of poverty, and in his many years of contemplation, he had learned many things. "I know the how way to spend your coins," the dervish said. "Give them to me, and I will teach you wisdom." The merchant thought about it for a while, but he sensed that he could trust the dervish, and so he handed over his coins.

"Take these," the dervish said, "and listen to the words you will hear."

"I heard you, to listen to your words."

"I am listening," he said.

The first bit of advice is that it is best to take the middle in everything.

"Second, wise no breath and fear no death. Third, in the eyes of a lover, she believed was beautiful and fair, that which she do not understand, judge not."

The merchant said these words, and the merchant lay sleeping. He had uttered magic words, and the dervish burst wide open, and in its place stood a mountain of gold. The merchant remembered those words, the frog burst wide open, and in its place stood a great mountain of gold. The merchant was overjoyed, and in its place stood a great mountain of gold. The merchant remembered those words, and he walked out into a fresh garden filled with flowers. It smoked more beautiful than anything he had ever smelled, and he thought he might like to stay there forever.

He was about to lie down beneath a tree to rest, when he saw a glowing pool. On the banks of the pool she spied a gigantic frog as big as a man. It sat very still, staring at him.

But the merchant knew he must not afraid, and so he kept looking, and as he stared, a beautiful girl in a bridal dress appeared beside the frog. She looked at the merchant and asked, "What do you seek here?"

He had ventured magic words, and the words of the dervish, and he said, "To the eyes of a lover, the beloved is beautiful." He saw a gleaming pool. He smiled, and he said to the frog, the frog burst wide open, and in its place stood a mountain of gold.

Congestive heart failure can be as deadly as a heart attack

H eart disease is the leading cause of death in the United States—and for many heart patients who come to the emergency room, it’s their first heart emergency. Over time, one or more of the symptoms may become less obvious or less efficient at pumping blood. That means that heart disease patients—such as those with a prior heart attack, or heart failure—need to take their risk of heart disease—the risk of heart failure—very seriously.

Surprisingly, a heart attack, be it acute or chronic, can lead to congestive heart failure, because when the heart muscle is damaged or weakened, the heart’s blood flow may not be as effective as it should be. This means that the heart may need to work harder to pump enough blood to keep your body supplied with oxygen and nutrients. As the heart muscle has to work harder, blood cannot circulate efficiently through the organs and other body parts.

Left untreated, heart failure is a progressive disease that affects the majority of patients with heart disease, and it can be a deadly condition. People who are at risk for heart failure should be aware of the symptoms and get the treatment they need to control it.

The symptoms of heart failure include:

- Difficulty breathing while lying down
- Shortness of breath during daily activities
- Fatigue or weakness
- Noticeable weight gain
- A rapid or irregular heartbeat
- Swelling in the legs, feet, abdomen, or the lower body
- Edema (swelling) in the ankles, feet, and legs
- Fatigue
- Pounding or racing heart
- Palpitations
- A dry cough
- Swelling in the belly, chest, or lungs
- Loss of appetite
- Nausea
- Unusual weight loss
- Weakness
- Rapid heart rate

The diagnosis of heart failure is confirmed by the presence of symptoms on examination and through laboratory tests. The most common signs of heart failure are:

- An enlarged heart
- Fluid retention
- Low blood pressure
- Reduced urine output

The treatment of heart failure involves:

- Medications
- Lifestyle changes
- Dietary changes
- Physical therapy
- Exercise

In order to prevent heart failure, it is essential to have a healthy lifestyle and to follow the advice of your doctor.

Rosacea Reduces Nose and Cheeks

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: The tip of my husband’s nose and cheek is red and inflamed. I’ve noticed this over the past year. People ask me if he is drinking more or smoking more -- he’s been drinking less. He is a non-smoker. He doesn’t bother him, but it bothers me.

ANSWER: The probable culprit is rosacea (rose-A-she-uh). It starts as a reddening of the nose and cheeks, and some- times the forehead. It can affect the forehead.

Your husband ought to steer clear of any substance that makes his nose and cheeks, and some- times his forehead, red. Some people who know absolutely nothing about rosacea blame it on alcohol or food. People with rosacea often have eye involvement, something that’s often overlooked but may affect vision. The redness can feel gritty and might burn. They, too, can become quite sensitive.

Rosacea is not a fatal condition but it can seriously affect a person’s social life, self-esteem, and career. It can be quite disfiguring. Rosacea can range from mild signs of redness, warmth, or visible blood vessels to potentially more severe signs and symptoms.

One of the main causes of rosacea is the overproduction of sebum (oil) by the skin. This can lead to redness, inflammation, and the formation of small pimplies or papules.

Rosacea is more common in people with fair skin, but it can occur in people of any skin type. It usually affects adults, with peak onset between the ages of 30 and 50. Women are affected more often than men, although men can also be affected.

Rosacea is a chronic condition that can be managed but not cured. It is not contagious. There is no known cure for rosacea, but there are treatments available to help control symptoms.

Treatments may include:
- Topical medications, such as retinoids or azelaic acid
- Oral antibiotics
- Phototherapy
- Oral medications, such as immunosuppressants

It is important to see a dermatologist or a healthcare provider if you suspect you have rosacea. Early detection and management can help prevent worsening symptoms.

Rosacea is not a disease to be taken lightly. It can have a significant impact on a person’s quality of life. It is important to work with a healthcare provider to find the best treatment plan for you.
