Leaders alarmed over Snake Valley plan

by Sarah Miles
SNIP WRITER

 Debate over a potential deal by the Southern Nevada Water Authority to pump water from the Snake Valley Aquifer to Las Vegas boiled up again Wednesday night at a public meeting at the Salt Lake City Library.
The meeting, presented by the League of Women Voters of Salt Lake, featured government officials, scientists and academics speaking about the potential impacts of drawing water from the aquifer, which supplies the Utah-Nevada border for more than 100 miles southbound from southwestern Tooele County to northwestern Iron County.
Mike Styler, executive director of the Utah Department of Natural Resources, reiterated that both Nevada and Utah have been ordered by the federal government to reach an agreement regarding the division of water in the valley before any pumping can begin. A draft agreement was released in August 2009 and the final agreement was finalized in January. The governor has yet to sign the agreement. But Styler said, “The state and the federal government have had a long-standing history of working on this, including a pre-determined division of the water. But both sides could come to a workable agreement, including environmental protections, mitigation of resources and needs, and flexible water aquifer management.”
Salt Lake County Mayor Corcoran, the Democratic candidate for governor, said he has two roles in the Snake Valley issue — one as mayor with concerns about dust from a dried-out west desert worsening Jim’s air quality, and another as someone who has served seven years as a member of the committee the Legislature created to look at the Snake Valley agreement.
“At the end of the day, I didn’t support the agreement in its current form for several reasons,” Corcoran said, adding those include concerns about more water going away than actually exists in the Snake Valley Aquifer, concerns about protection for water quality, concerns about the impact of the agreement on the Southern Nevada Water Authority, and whether the federal government would support the agreement.

Excelsior teacher turnover 50 percent
But charter school’s student turnover turns out to be significantly less than expected

Roughly half of Excelsior Academy’s teachers left the charter school after its first year in operation, the school’s director said Tuesday.
“We have replaced about 50 percent of our teachers,” said Excelsior director Debby Lloyd. “We had a lot of teachers that wanted to reach closer to their homes, and I know of at least two that left because their husbands had been re-located by their work outside of the state.”
In fall, Excelsior Academy has 30 teachers on staff. This year, down from 36 last year as a result of the smaller student body, the school has a total of 150 students. Many of the district teachers on staff at the start of the last school year have left because of the new enrollment, said Lloyd.

Man charged with attempted murder of his infant son

A Tooele man was charged Tuesday with attempting to murder his infant son.
Mason Barnett, 21, was charged with the first-degree felony after Tooele City Detective Ian Borders was called to Primary Children's Hospital last Thursday evening by staff there to investigate a possible case of child abuse. Doctors told the off-duty Patrolman's infant son had severe brain trauma in the back, and side of his brain possibly caused by shaking. These injuries had caused swelling of the infant's brain, severe hemorrhaging in the eyes and

Emergency response drills

Emergency response drills on Wednesday involved several agencies. The drills were intended to test the response of ambulance services and the Mountain West Management Agency, Tooele Security, the Federal Emergency Management Agency, and the Tooele County Sheriff’s Office. The exercises were conducted to assess the effectiveness of the Chemical Stockpile Emergency Preparedness Program (CSEPP) sites in the area.

Local agencies were tested on their response to a simulated chemical disaster. The exercises were conducted in collaboration with other federal agencies and included a response to a simulated chemical spill.

Emergency responders were tested on their ability to manage and clean up a real chemical disaster. The exercises were conducted in collaboration with the Tooele County Sheriff’s Office and the Federal Emergency Management Agency.

Emergency responders were instructed to work together to decontaminate the area. The drills were conducted to assess the effectiveness of the CSEPP sites in the area.

The seven months Dyllan Williams has been driving he’s never thought road rage could go beyond obscene gestures and perhaps a few angry words. Never thought road rage could never thought road rage could ever go beyond obscene gestures and perhaps a few angry words.

But Sunday afternoon the 16-year-old was beaten on a major highway. It began when he was following a male, said he got a good look at the car and its driver, but before he had a chance to make the traffic stop, he got hit by another car.

“Next thing I know, before I could apply my brakes and stop my car, he hits me in the side mirror and drags me on the ground,” Williams said. “Then I turn around and when I get back to my car, my mirror has broken.”

When Williams got back to his car, he was being followed to his Tooele home, removed windowless from 2005 North and pulled into the parking lot of the state Driver License Division Building. He got home, told his father about it, and hit the bed without seeing or hearing a thing.

“Look, it’s not like it was just a light hit, he was hitting something with what you would see in a cage fighting,” said his mom, “just wailing on the kid.”

Herrera tried to drive across the street to block the path, but he was hit by another car.

“People get upset about how other people drive all the time. But for them to pull over and come to the window and cut and hit you to the face — that’s what he did,” Williams said. He was shocked at the enormity of the road rage.

“People get upset about how other people drive all the time. But I hit them to the face — that’s what he did,” Williams said.

Dyllan Williams holds out his cell phone with a photo of himself Wednesday evening taken after he was beaten up in an alleged road rage attack Sunday in Tooele. Police are still looking for suspects in the incident.

While Dyllan said he’s glad he didn’t go home that day: “He would have followed me home. The last thing he said to me before he got back to his car was ‘be nice deal. If I know where I lived, that’s dangerous to me and my whole family,” Dyllan said. “I’d rather take a couple punches to the face than have them know my family and hurt my family.”

Police are still searching for the attacker. Lt. Adam Day of the Tooele City Police Department said because a license plate number was not enough to track the car, and there is simply not enough manpower available to hand registeration of every Utah vehicle, the car that was hit by the driver assigned to a Tooele resident.

“Definitely had injuries, there was a witness and we know his story. It’s just difficult to track this car down,” said Day. “We’re still investigatin’.”

Breezy hopes anyone with information relating to the incident will contact Tooele City Police.

Herrera said he got a good look at both the driver and passenger. He described the driver as a slim woman about 5’8”, and the passenger as a slim woman about 5’8”, and the man there was a witness and we know his story. EPA plans to take Pine Canyon smelter site off Superfund list

by Sarah Miles

The Environmental Protection Agency has proposed that the Superfund list be revised to remove the Pine Canyon Refining Site in Tooele County. The smelter operated in the 1930s and 1940s and prior to contamination cleanup efforts in the 1970s, the site was listed on the National Priorities List in 2000 because of smelting wastes and contaminants, including arsenic, cadmium, copper, lead, mercury, and zinc. The site cleanup action began in 2005 and activities were completed in 2007.

According to the EPA’s Basin & Superfund website, the site includes the Pine Canyon Refining Area — consisting of the former smelter area owned by ARCO (Atlantic Richfield Company) — the Pine Canyon–Lincoln Township area, and portions of the Tooele Valley River that run from the smelter to town. The Utah Division of Wildlife Resources and ARCO maintains the site. The area consists and ensured that ARCO has designated the site as a national Superfund site.

The site was located near the smelter, and its activities began in 1918. A few years later, the company added a lead-sulfide flotation mill and dig, treatment plant for lead and zinc recovery. Production of copper began in 1921, but that continued until 1972. The smelting ceased in 1988. The site was used as a staging area for large-scale mining and was used for many years. The smelter site was designated a national Superfund site.

In 2005, 2,030 cubic yards of contaminated soils were excavated from 17 properties in Pine Canyon, according to the EPA’s Basin & Superfund website. The EPA used backfilling to restore the site to its previous condition. Also in 2005, 10 inches of soil were excavated from several Tooele Valley River valley sediments that had lead and arsenic contamination. Some level of institutional controls were added to the site in 2005.

In 2006, 18 locations in the cancerous area also had lead and arsenic levels over the cleanup level. A 12-inch thick cap of clean soil was placed over the arsenic and lead material and then the surface was re-vegetated. The cleanup effort had forcing and other practices to prevent contamination from spreading. Other actions, including removing soil and vegetation and planting turf, have helped reduce levels, although they have also been done.

If the site is deleted from the NPL, the EPA will be monitored at the site and conduct reviews every five years. “Because there are institutional controls we will be looking at the site every five years,” she said. “The federal and state agency is always there. It’s just that sort of not as much of a presence as we have in the past.”

Institutional controls — which can include fencing, amenities, soil contamination, sediment, dust, ordnance, soil-disturbing activities, building permits and information — have been put in place at the site to reduce the chance of human exposure to contamination.

Institutional controls at the site include a conservation easement granted by the state Division of Natural Resources in 2006 for 3,120 acres in its natural, scenic and open space conditions, and an environmental covenant on the same property, other environmental covenants to prevent further threats. Film critics, too, have to evolve in the digital age

The world of film criticism has changed drastically since I began reviewing movies four years ago. Or perhaps I'm more aware of the transition from print to television to the blogsphere now—and it's evident this medium will continue to evolve.

Although my Real Talk column no longer appears free online, it can still be read in the print edition and online digital versions of the newspaper. And hundreds, if not thousands, of other people are hitting the web posting their reviews on personal blogs and various online video conferencing services. And most recently to the evolution of film criticism to the "Alien" franchise.

For September, we reviewed the "Alien" franchise—the first four, not the two "Alien vs. Predator" flicks—starring Sigourney Weaver. During the two-plus hours of discussion via the online video conferencing service Skype, we talked about everything from what we've been watching recently to the evolution of film criticism to the "Alien" franchise.

As the guest for this episode of Considering the Sequads, I contributed my two cents in each topic of conversation. Even though the trio of hosts write about movies on their own, they all considered me to be the professional of the group and wanted my insight into how film criticism is changing. Touching on the obvious transition from print to online, the subject of criticism still necessary arose. My answer is yes. But the way in which movie-goers want their reviews has taken a different path. This transition from what we've been watching recently to the controversial New York Press critics' roundtable from Roger Ebert from the Chicago Sun-Times, it's also mentioned on the radio or television for the Utah media.

Because we are in a constant state of progress, it's only natural that the way movie reviews are reviewed changes. Some want a "thumbs up" or "thumbs down" recommendation before hitting the movie theater. Others prefer a more in-depth analytical look as to why they should or should not see a film. I try to balance my thoughts and give just enough synopsis to provide readers with information to make a decision.

The term "film critic" is no longer limited to someone believing you need proper training to be considered a true film critic—ahem, Armond White. While others see the term more loosely, describing anyone who writes a blog. No matter how one reviews films, or how they describe themselves, if they're passionate about what they do, their opinion is still valid to someone no matter if you agree or disagree. Take Jason, Andy and Kari for instance. They are extremely knowledgeable about films but don't claim to be professional critics. However, their thoughts on the importance of criticism and how it's changed are enlightening and refreshing. I think everyone who does films should have their opinions to a podcast for everyone online who's aware of the podcast to download and listen. (The September edition will be up sometime at the end of next week at ctspodcast.com.) No matter if it's done through print, TV, radio, blogs or podcasts, people will always be talking and kicking—but continues to evolve.

Constitutional amendments shape current American life

For the past four years, the schoolhouse of Ophir has been closing off its mining heritage and turning towards a step back to its time through restored buildings. Sharon St. Clair, chairperson of the Ophir school district, said the grand opening of the completed schoolhouse will be the main attraction. Not only has the town of Ophir repurposed its building; the schoolhouse has been a center of activity for more than a hundred years, she said.

The schoolhouse was originally the doctor's clinic for the only doctor in Ophir. Later, it was transformed into a one-bed room home, and because the schoolhouse for all grade levels, according to St. Clair. It could hold up to 80 students at a time. It was originally built by Ophir resident Bud Young and the rest of the buildings on the property has been a continuous process. The schoolhouse used had been converted into a multi-purpose building. These layers were stripped off and the old wood walls were replaced. A wall was also knocked out and the building was stabilized. Former teacher Mary Jo Alexander, who also oversees restoration of the schoolhouse and is currently in charge of maintaining the building, will be hosting various activities for children to participate in. In addition to the schoolhouse's opening, Sid Hollinger, an expert on historic Ophir stories, will tell stories of the mining town of Ophir.

Bathrobe Belles, a barbershop quartet, will provide entertainment. St. Clair said there will also be coffee and snacks at Ophir Fest. Money, chips, and drinks at the Ophir Fest booths will be selling items like lottery, food, and beverages.

Ophir Fest will be held at the Ophir Historic District Museum on September 18 from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m.

REEL TALK

Affleck shows directorial maturity in ‘The Town’

I t’s the “Gone Baby Gone” and the upcoming release of “The Town” are any indication of the things to come, Ben Affleck is a man of many talents. The two films are very different, yet it could focus more on setting — something he’s done just once since winning an Academy Award for his first screenplay with Matt Damon for “Good Will Hunting.” The plot is Affleck and acting don’t necessarily go well together. Earlier this year he was nominated as the worst actor at the Razzie Awards.

However, “Gone Baby Gone” was fantastic — and so was Claire, as Ben. Ben took on the starring role. In fact, “Gone Baby Gone” is an exceptionally well-acted crime drama centered around a high-speed robbery in Boston — it’s Ben Affleck’s performance that nearly ruins a good crime flick. The authenticity of its characters and locales is what makes it stand out.

While “The Town” proves that Ben Affleck can wear both hats at once with wear both hats at once with flair and precision, he’s never harmed anyone. While Claire cooperates with the FBI lead by Adam Frenley (Hammer) and Dino Ciampa (Tim Welkens), Doug winds up falling for Claire after escaping through a getaway car. Claire learns of Doug’s true identity and his involvement in the robbery at her bank. But it isn’t Claire who gives them up during what Doug claims to be his last heist — the robbery of Fenway Park following a playoff game. That falls on the 4th of July.

Cowboys play first region game

by Mark Watson

SPORTS EDITOR

With the pre-season games in the rear view mirror, the Grantsville Cowboys can now concentrate on region encounters. The Cowboys open Region 11 action on Friday at Ben Lomond in Ogden. TheunlessScarsetposted over Ogden 7-0 at halftime last week, but dropped the game 12-7. Grantsville coach Troy Howard said it is back to the basics on offense for the rest of his team.

Grantsville opened the season with a pair of victories over Wasatch and North Sanpete, but since have lost tight battles to Millard and San Juan. The Stallions are 2-2 with losses to Provo and Ogden and losses to Provo and Ogden. The Cowboys have before. Tyson really has a 12th. For Stansbury scores that didn’t count, Matt Linslde finished with a 98 while Tom Griffith came in with a 102. Zach McKey finished with a 105.

Tooele Eagles looking to recruit new members to further charitable causes

In February 1898, the owners of six competing theaters in Seattle, Wash., sat on a pile of lumber in a shipyard and discussed how to handle a new invention’s arrival.

After agreeing upon an approach to the matter at hand, the owners decided to start a theatrical organization called “The Order of Good Things.” Each member of the Order were members of traveling theater troupes. Meetings were often held on a stage and after business was tended to they would bring out a keg of beer and enjoy social time.

Eventually, the bald eagle was elected as the group’s emblem and the name of the group changed to the Fraternal Order of the Eagle.

It did not take long for the idea to spread. ‘Theater troops’ began to flock to the midwest, spreading the ‘Eagles’ faith’ to the land west of the Mississippi.

In 1914, the Order of the Eagles Aerie was moved to Tooele, according to Mack Glover, worthy president of the Utah State Aerie, Fraternal Order of Eagles and a past president of the Tooele Aerie.

Tradition says they met on the northeast corner of Main and Vine streets, near where Stato Theme photography is today, according to Glover.

Today’s Fraternal Order of Eagles claims more than 1.1 million members in 1,500 Aeries throughout the United States and Canada. In Tooele, there are 400 members of the local Aerie and 200 members of the ladies auxiliary, all united under the pride of our country and the wish to help people, “Glover said.

“We do a lot of fundraising for different causes and we don’t want to sound like we are bragging.”

“We do a lot of fundraising for different causes and we don’t want to sound like we are bragging.”

Through raffles, dinners, parties, and other events, the lodge raises money from its members and the public to support a variety of local, state and national charities.

That includes supporting the Eagles Memorial Foundation, which provides medical and educational benefits to children of Eagles while serving in the military. In the course of their daily employment, members to further charitable causes.

WIND UPRISING chronicles the turbulent journey shared by an entrepreneur and an engineer who broke trail for wind energy in their home state of Utah. They overcome legislative barriers, fiecl investors, power purchasing conundrums, and a “Not In My Back yard” resistance from residents that nearly stopped them in their tracks.

This timely story details the common roadblocks that stand in the way of wind energy development and the solutions that were discovered in Spanish Fork, Utah.

O nce upon a time, a long ago, all the animals of the forest were friends, and closest of all some elegant grasshopper and handsome green toad. They loved and admired each other. Toad especially loved grasshopper’s beautiful colors — his cap of many colors, his stripes and spots. And grasshopper was very impressed by toad. Toad spend most of his time in the water, with only his eye and nose sticking out. They shared other traits too — they both were fun-loving and eneggetic, and sometimes when toad called out to his friends, he sounded almost exactly like cricket sounded when he rubbed his legs together.
Time passed, and each time they saw each other in the bush, they spoke of their affection for each other. One day toad awoke with a marvelous idea, and he called to his wife.
“Let us invite grasshopper and his wife to supper tonight.
We’ll have a feast! What do you say?”
“Of course,” grasshopper said, “that I cannot say?”
“Quiet!” toad cried.
“Quiet, please! This is not time for making such a racket. I can’t eat!”
Grasshopper and his wife stopped eating, and the air around them grew quiet. When toad and his wife had finested eating, grasshopper said sullenly. “Tomorrow you shall have to come to our house to share our supper.”
“That sounds wonderful.”
toad said.
The next evening toad and his wife, wearing her favorite necklace, arrived at grasshoper’s hut. Once inside they saw a steaming pot of insect stew, and toad’s stomach rumbled with pleasure.
“Before we eat,” grasshopper said, “please wash your feet.” He pointed out a water jar that sat outside.
“And I do, too!” said toad.
He reached to take a ladle from this day on.”
“Very well, then! Let us agree this time,” grasshopper said. “And better to fix that!”
toad said,
and he hopped outside and washed his feet. Then he hopped back inside to join the feast. He was just about to reach for the plat-er’s feet.”
“Of course,” toad ’ said, and he rubbed his legs together.
“Now look here,” said toad,
“this is ridiculous. You’re trying to embarrass me. You know very well that I must use my feet to hop about, and if they got dirty in the water jar and the food, there’s nothing that I can do to fix that!”
Grasshopper frowned. “You start this argument,” he said, unmolested.
“Of course,” grasshopper

Jungle Birthday Party for your Preschooler

by Donna Erickson

If there's a birthday in your house this month, go on a safari! A handful of the most unique and fun activities are just waiting for you to give your little one the party of a lifetime. (And they're right in your own backyard or neighborhood, too.)

A jungle-themed party is always a hit for the preschool age birthday kid, says Nancy Tracy of Tracy's 360. Old mom and grandmother with more than 30 years of experience teaching preschool programs and ignores names. Others have the same problem: They remember kids by their unique characteristics. But what about the kids with autism, who have with solid skills. They can't get enough of jungle-themed picture books, storytelling, games and puppets. When great the change, day it jump right into pretend- ing and acting out scenes like their favorite animals, too. It's easy and inexpensive to plan your preschool child's birth- day party. Here are a few tips from a popular theme. Here are some basic tips to get you started.

Miser Area

As young party goers gather, play the jungle sounds CD to set the scene. Give them something to do right away to help them feel comfortable with the sur- roundings and meeting new friends. Let them try on and choose a safari hat and then Dangerous are set out safari water canteens before- hand. For each canister, you' ll need:

- One 32-ounce sport bottle or metal bottle filled with water and cap.
- One 42-inch strip of 1-inch- wide crepe paper (or other ribbon or coton fabric): cut with pointing scissors.
- One 3-by-10-inch rectangle of craft foam: cut with pointing scissors.
- Wild animal stickers

Directions: Glue the underside of the midpoint of the strips/ fabric strip is the base of the hostile. Lift the halves of the strip upward over each other and tape around the hostile. Use tape strips to secure them in place. Tie the loose ends of the strips in a knot.

Safari Food:

- Peanut butter and banana finger sandwiches
- Plastic critters
- Finger sandwiches
- Banana pudding with fresh fruit and animal crackers on top
- Peanut butter and banana finger sandwiches
- Peanut butter and banana stick toy.

Activity:

Play a safari game and look for the hidden stuffed animals and plastic cutouts. Make paper bag animal puppets.

Take photos of each child, print from the computer, and turn them into a personalized frame to take home as a keepsake.

Tips: Elder a neighborhood suggestion "behold" to plan games and interact with the energetic kids like a pro.

At Christmas time, neurological research at Primary Children’s Hospital, and support for the National Epilepsy Foundation are among the group's many causes, according to Moore.

The biggest challenge facing the local Eagles, both the Aerie and the auxiliary, is retaining new active members.

"While we may have 600 members for the books, attendance at meetings and work activities are much lower, sometimes around 35," Glover said.

Moore added, "Six of members just so they can drink in the club run by the Eagles."

"It is hard today to find people that are willing or able to put in the time to be an active member," said Flashy Fox, who has been a member of the Tooele Eagles Ladies auxiliary for 40 years.

The Eagles run a social club for members in the basement of the Aerie building at 515 Pine Street.

"It pays the bills and keeps the building open," Glover said.

Glover moved to Tooele in 1978 as part of military assignment.

"Ten years later some of my friends invited me to come with them to the Eagles," he said. "I enjoyed the fellowship of the members and the charity work they did and decided I wanted to join.

Membership in the Aerie is open to men and women today, but only women may join the Ladies auxiliary.

Becoming a member involves having a current member sponsor you and be interviewed by a committee. They review committee votes on the application.

"If you want to join and can't find a member, just stop by the Aerie building and you can find a member here," Glover said.

New members go through a short initiation ceremony where they learn about the purpose of the Eagles and the organization's four values of liberty, truth, justice and equality.

"We have no secret calls or handshakes," Glover said. "We are a charitable organization, not a secret one."

The biggest change Glover has noticed while being a member of the Eagles is the drop in membership.

"When I first joined we had a hall and we would have a card game by Master Chevals and it would be filled with people from a local store," Glover said. "We would sell a lot of tickets and make a lot of money. We just don't have the resources to do things that pay any money."

Every first Saturday of the month the Eagles hold a family bingo and dinner. The public is invited to attend. In Utah there are 12 Aeries and nine ladies auxiliaries. As Aerie in Park City recently closed its doors due to lack of membership.

To find out more about the Tooele Eagles since 1986 is the secret one."

Photos of former leaders of the Tooele Fraternal Order of the Eagles line the walls in the organization's lodge.
