Grantsville City Police are taking the lead into the 21st century and onto the streets in the pursuit of justice with the purchase of their own dashcam equipment.

Officials are now equipped with wearable cameras that function much the same as the standard dash-mounted camera, but at a fraction of the cost for a more user-friendly product, said Lt. Wes Barrett of the Grantsville City Police Department.

“Dash cameras cost us about $5,000 each, and they have some limitations,” he said. “There is a delay between $500 and $1,000, so for the price of one we can get five of them.”

Wolfcom 3rd Eye cameras can be mounted on the dash as well as be worn on the officer’s body, depending on what the situation requires. The cameras are easily replaceable and can be recharged on site.

Each officer’s camera has a 1080p resolution and record audio.

The camera’s battery is good for 17 hours between charges. If it needs emergency recharging it can be charged on site.

Bryce Eardley, principal at Northlake Elementary, has been chosen by the Utah Association of Elementary School Principals as the “2013 Rookie Principal of the Year.” Eardley has been principal at Northlake for two years and will receive the award next month at a UASEP conference.

The award, which is presented annually to a principal in their first three years as an elementary school principal, will be presented to Eardley at the organization’s annual summer conference in June.

In just two years at Northlake, Bryce has contributed much to the success of the school,” said Jim Jones, principal at Bear Aspen Elementary, who nominated Eardley for the award. “It is amazing to see the impact of this Title I school’s achievement already. He is truly an amazing leader.”

As part of National Hospital Week, Mountain West Medical Center CEO Marc Eaton highlighted the facility's employees and services to the community.

"National Hospital Week is an event where all hospitals take an event where all hospitals take a look at themselves and acknowledge the efforts of the facilities they work at," he said.

In December 2012, MWMC was one of three Utah hospitals that received an "A" grade for safety from Washington, D.C.-based Leapfrog Group, a national nonprofit that rates hospitals.

"One thing that stood out right away was that MWMC is one of the top 10 hospitals in the country," he said.

"We're also a part of the Leapfrog Group, a national nonprofit that rates hospitals.

Is America about to checkmate Russia?

A U.S. Secretary of State John Kerry meets with his Russian counterpart in Moscow to discuss Syria, much of the world is wondering what America’s endgame is. But what is it really all about? What if America ultimately serves not to engage the Syrian conflict but to checkmate a stronger Russia because there’s very little advantage for it to engage? Increasingly, it’s Russia that has the advantages in this most complex and evolutionary battles in Syria. What if America_one of the world’s two superpowers_endorses and declares the old Sunni-ese and post-Mideastern sectarianism of an opponent to fully follow through with their threats and punch the point of bringing harm upon themselves? Many in Taiwan are worried that America will make a strategic misstep because there’s very little advantage to it to engage.

Taiwan, as it already has “bought” for survival. For many in Taiwan merchants now find themselves in a sophisticated way.”

Kennedy could argue that America’s ideal ends are in no way compromised, as it is increasingly in Russia’s favor. Now that Israel has been able to procure and deploy uniquely weapons in Syria that it has shared (for now) with the United States, the possibility of bringing harm upon itself is now less likely to be an option. They’ll revert back to doing so. But doing that too early would have undermined America’s position, for it would signify a pre-mature action for the very important partners the U.S. has.

There were serious conflicts between local officials and federal land managers over health and welfare issues by granting a “probably unconstitutional authority” to local officials to interfere when they think federal land managers assist doing their jobs. All four of Tooele County’s legislators voted for this bill.

“The legislature has not set the stage for unnecessary conflicts between public lands managers and local officials,” he said. “Substitute Senate Bill 364 fails to incorporate or include any of the supporting bills passed by Congress or the other states,” Clemens wrote on the scorecard.

Both Thacker and Knudson voted for Senate Joint Resolution 13, which Clemens said abused the control the federal government has over public lands in the state.

“Every year the Legislature passes bills such as this which would abolish at a stroke of the pen the present assets for quality of life while putting the state on a collision course with the federal government,” Clemens wrote on the scorecard.

“Although the Sierra Club was disappointed on several fronts, it saw that there were a few rays of light in the outcome of this session,” Eardley wrote on the scorecard. “House Bill 315 requires school districts in areas with high pollution levels to report their emissions and reduce them. This is a positive step.”

Thacker and Knudson voted for House Bill 315. Eardley abstained from voting on this bill.

“House Bill 104 represents a small step toward clean air and energy efficiency,” Mayhew said. “It encourages schools to take the initiative to implement energy efficiency programs to demonstrate that schools are part of the solution to the problem outside our office for...”

“Failure can’t be something we are happy with and accept,” he said. “Challenges still always arise. We have to recognize that major factors of the failure and success in their lives, not only in school, but in our lives. School is a place where we can expect a future that is not needed or an option at all.”

Every Monday Eardley reads to students and posts a motivational offer to students to solve for a protest. “Not learning’s not an option at all,” he said.

“I don’t know what is the proper place for protests anymore,” Eardley said. “But iteration and evolution is what we need.”

“Removing the hurdle of finding the state,” he said. “I’m very lucky we have a staff that is willing to experiment and give it a go. All of my crazy ideas. They are wonderful.”

Barrett said he and Officer Morgan Swensen looked at several different models of wearable law enforcement cameras before choosing the Wolfcom 3rd Eye model. Swensen said he found the model, which he has tested for about a month, to be less cumbersome than other models, including the brand officers from the Salt Lake City Police Department recently began using.

“This one seems to be more efficient and downloading it seems to be more user friendly, it seems to work very well in all the weather conditions, there’s nothing extra you have to carry around.”

With the almost $10,000 cost covered by funds from the Utah Commission on Crime and Juvenile Justice, and the department’s annual helping of state alcohol commission money, the 10 cameras went live Friday afternoon.

Barrett said introducing the cameras into the department helps keep both officers and members of the community safe by providing a more objective and accurate record of stops and encounters than was available before.

“I get a fair amount of complaints on officers where people say, ‘Well, they did this. I can literally pull the video and review the whole scene and say, ‘This is what happened,’’ said Barrett.

“I have had them pull the video for the people and say, ‘If you have an officer not doing what he’s supposed to, you know that, too.”

Grantsville police are the first in the county to use body cameras versus dash cameras, and one of the first in the state. Barrett said other local agencies have also expressed interest in the devices. So far they have lived up to expectations.

“For us, we feel it worked out very well,” he said.

A deputy from the Tooele County Sheriff’s Office obtained a warrant to perform a blood draw on Tharp to test for blood/ alcohol content. The Sheriff’s office is awaiting results from that test before determining whether changes may be filed.

This is the county’s first ATV-related fatality this year. So far in 2013, there have been a handful of serious ATV accidents, including one in Grantsville Friday in which a man broke his clavicle.

WENDOVER HIGH SCHOOL

E ach spring, representatives from Uintah High School and Dugway High School attend the Sterling Scholar competition. The Sterling Scholar Awards are sponsored by Delta Tau Delta, the Sterling family, and representatives from the Sterling Foundation, Inc. The program recognizes high school seniors in the Uintah School District and Dugway High School for their outstanding academic, extracurricular, community service, and exceptional service to school and community. Every Sterling Scholar must complete a portfolio documenting academic achievements, leadership, and service.

With the growth in the number of high schools participating in the competition, a new level of judging was implemented this year for the first time. In the first round, seniors were judged solely on the basis of their portfolios. Then, those portfolios were reviewed at the semi-final competition by a panel of three judges who are experts in the various categories.

Finally, 15 finalists in each category were selected to proceed to the final round of judging. The final round comprised some of the last meetings of the judges with three new judges. A winner and two runners-up were announced at the Sterling Scholars banquet, which was held at Caruthersville High School in March.

Diana Barreras: English

Diana Barreras was born in Oaxaca, Mexico, and is the daughter of Andrea Barreras. She was raised alongside a few of her cousins, on her grandmother and great-grand- mother’s tiny little farm in Mexico until she was six, at which time she moved to the United States. Although she has no memories of her childhood in Mexico, she has many fond memories of her host family in Arizona. She also remembers taking brief trips into the city where she observed how they enjoyed fresh hot cakes and various fruit products. But they bought from nearby street vendors. Her grandmother still lives in Mexico today. Barreras has attended more than six schools in the United States as a result of her nomadic lifestyle. She has attended West Wendover High School and Dugway High School. She attended four others while living in St. George, Utah, for three years. She believes the people she has had a chance to meet and the experience she has received as a direct result of her situation has been the reason for her strong desire to help students of Dugway in the Sterling Scholars competition.

The move to San Francisco and Los Angeles made the New York Giants and the Los Angeles Dodgers into the most bitter rivals of the National League own-
Long, long ago, all the stars shared a spot in the sky. They were all small, bright and happy, connected as one family. But as time passed, they drifted apart, and Earth drifted for a long time without a father or mother to comfort her.

Eventually, a star came close and gave birth to a little boy. "Sleep, child," she said. "Your mother is watching over you." So the little boy slept, and when he woke up in the morning, he found Earth sitting at his bedside. She sang to him a lullaby of love, and he fell asleep again.

But the star was not content. She wanted more. "What do you see when you look at the sky?" she asked Earth. "I see stars," Earth replied. "But the stars are not enough. I want a mother.

Earth was filled with joy. She knew she had found her place in the universe. She would no longer be alone. She would have a family. She would be happy. And so she rested beneath a thick blanket of darkness, but nothing brought her joy until one night, Mother Earth was so tired that she fell asleep.

She slept, and little child of mine. Sleep while your aunts and uncles watch over you. Enjoy your rest. Be happy."

Earth woke up, and the boy before her was a little boy. He was happy, and he loved to sing. He loved to climb the mountains and when it did, he had to make all kinds of mischief. And sometimes he felt sad and afraid. Being alone after so many years, he did not know how to feel.

Mother Earth was worried. She knew she had to do something. She had to create her own family if she wished to find happiness again. She would have to create her own heart and intentions on creation. Time passed, they drifted apart, and Earth drifted far beyond space, enjoying the company of her star brothers and sisters.

"Mi niño," she said, "why are you doing this? Why do you make so much mischief?"

The boy heard her and laughed harder. Once again, he dived into the waste and came up with a marvelous. Once again, he began to spit.

"Mi niño," her mother scolded him.

And when his mother wept with frustration, he felt terribly sad. "I'm sorry," he said. "I promise I won't make trouble again."

Mother Earth understood. She could do nothing but love and cherish El Niño, even when he wreaked mischief on all her other children. And to this day, sometimes he is what he does, and still Mother Earth loves him.

Proper air conditioner, swap cooler maintenance will save cash, increase cooling

Y ou've got to love Utah. As recently as last week, we were donning sweaters in the morning and low evening temps. Then, although handful didn't reach the record breaking high of 107 for the year yet, last Tuesday, yesterday, already got hotter. It is indeed cool down a lot as the week progresses, but who knows?

This is Utah, after all. We have all the weather. Especially during the spring months. That means that we will experience very hot weather in rapid fashion this summer.

The last week we've already experienced has sent people scurrying to start their air conditioners and make swamp coolers study for use. Compared to swamp coolers air conditioners have the advantage of cooling the air to a selected temperature regardless of the outside air temperature. To do this, they use a coolant and refrigeration system. This process requires energy to maintain the temperature in the conditioned space, however, conditioners, save money by not setting the thermostat too hot. For every degree you increase the temperature, you save one to three percent on energy costs.

Swamp coolers, on the other hand, use evaporative coolers, coil the air by pulling outside air through wet pads. In the moisture evapora- tors, or pads, it reduces the tempera- ture of the air. The amount the temperature is dependent on the humidity, the more the humidity the less the cooler can reduce the temperature. In very low humidity conditions, a swamp cooler can reduce the temperature by around 16 degrees. At 60 percent humidity it can reduce 10 degrees. As a result, conditioners circu- late the air instead of evaporating it. Humid days may stillstay hot and muggy.

Fortunately, we don't have all those. However, swamp coolers are considerably less expensive to run than air condi- tioners, especially in very hot, dry weather.

Both types of cooling devices need some springtime mainte- nance in order to perform properly for the summer season.

Air conditioners should have a version check for the spring — especially if it has not been done for the past two or three years. Before you bring in a new season, check these four checks yourself:

1. Clear away dust from around the outdoor air condit- oning unit so the air can flow freely around and through it. Be sure to clean and/or change filters. If you are going to go through the rest of the work- -shops to help save money, be sure to turn the unit off and even prevent a breakdown.

2. Keep check on the indoor unit. As long as you have a functioning unit all will be well. If you have a unit that is not functioning, be sure to call a professional.

3. Do not remove the thermostat in order to save on electricity. It will help save on energy all the same.

4. Spring is the perfect time to check the unit, keep the cool air feeling cool, and to keep cold air from blowing out of the windows.

A few tricks in using evapo- rative or swamp coolers:

- If you can install a thermostat, be sure it is set at a lower temperature all day and night.

- For better performance, cover the cooler to protect it from the sun and to keep cold air from blowing out of the windows.

- If your unit has one of these, be sure it is adjusted to drain in some waste water in the tray that could be needed.

- Sometimes in the fall, winter, check the unit out again. The warm (or cool) should be about an inch below the top of the unit and below the top of the outside pipe. If it is too high or too low, adjust the float. If it is covered with a heavy layer of mineral deposits, replace it.

- Some swamp coolers have a bleed-off valve to drain the circulating water and prevent excess mineral buildup. If your unit has one of these, be sure it is drained of any waste water.

- Clean up the unit and clean out any debris in the water pan. One of the nice features of a swamp cooler in a window, you may want to consider the fact that as you get your fan going and the unit on and off, it will lose about 5 percent of the temperature drops is dependent on the air temperature. The higher the humidity, the less the air cools.

- Cover the cooler to protect it and to keep cold air from blowing out of the windows. It may get too hot during the day. If you are using the cooler in a window, you may want to be able to pull it back and close the window to keep your house warmer.
