Grantsville Dinner Theatre to present musical Halloween treat

by Jessica Mader

For the first time since they opened last February, the cast of the Old Grantsville Church Dinner Theatre will perform “Sleepy Hollow” in the Tocen, 297 W. Clark Street. Additional evening showings will take place Friday, Oct. 26; Oct. 30 and Nov. 2, with a 1 p.m. performance on Halloween at 1:30 p.m. Ticket prices range from $13 to $15, with meals being catered by various businesses, including Mazz’s, Panda Express, Costa Vida, Subway and Pizza Hut. All sales must be reserved or purchased in advance. Patrons may call 435-241-8132 to reserve tickets or buy tickets online through a link on the Old Grantsville Church’s Facebook page.

Macae and Kelly Wanberg, co-creators of the Old Grantsville Church Dinner Theatre, said the theatre started out performing only once a year and was usually too expensive to produce. However, she said the noticed Tooele County residents seemed to want more theatre. As a result, they decided to expand the theatre’s repertoire to twice a week at Tooele City, Utah. Periodicals

“The musical stars Spencer Goodworth as Ichabod Crane, Katrina Van Wanberg as Katrina Van Tassel, and Dan Ogden as Brom Bruns. The show will be the first to feature Goodworth as Ichabod. He said he wants to portray the enemy of the show, the Headless Horseman, as a real person, not just a cartoon character. While the actors are excited about the role, Robinson said she’s prepared to play the parts because she’s been playing the role of Ichabod Crane for many years.

“Katrina,” he said, “is the best of two worlds. The show is really about the Headless Horseman, but she’s also about the issue of dividing the scarier aspect [of the show] from the scary aspect,” Robinson said. “Katrina is the character that we’ve been waiting for, and she’s really the character that makes the show work.”

The Headless Horseman is a character in the “Sleepy Hollow” series, created by the late Tim Burton. The character is known for his headless body and his love for Katrina Van Wanberg, who is played by Katrina Van Wanberg in the show.

“We’ve both really loved theater, and we’ve both loved Macae and Magnolia and Stonymaster and we just put it to the people. They’re going to get all the fun of playing Katrina, but they’re also going to get to see the Headless Horseman play the role,” Robinson said.

Votes are in and Stockton’s candidates are looking over their mail-in ballots. The municipal election is over and now is the time for the candidates to prepare for the city council.

Judy Bori: Born and raised in Tooele County, Judy Bori attended high school in Waukegan, Illinois, and graduated from Brigham Young University in 1957.

Nando Meli: I grew up in Stockton to a family of modest means. Asking for help has never been easy. If I find it. I will continue to protect them.

Thomas Karjola: I'm the right person for the job and I will continue to do the right thing for all of Stockton.

Voting will also be available at the Tooele County Clerk's Office at 42 S. Main, Tooele in Room #318.

Federal judge hears child labor case out of polygamous towns

Salt Lake City (AP) — A federal judge on Monday weighed evidence in determining whether to hold a polygamous town in contempt of court for violating a 2007 order that it pay back wages to its workers.

Unrelated to that order, the same judge heard arguments Monday in a dispute involving a polygamous sect with its headquarters in the Utah-Arizona border.

In the first case, Utah federal judge Tena Campbell is considering a contempt motion filed by U.S. Justice Department attorneys that would hold a polygamous group in contempt for failing to make a back-pay payment ordered by a federal judge.

grant again in the future. However, running unopposed on Main Street isn’t an option, since it’s a state-highway. So asked.

McCull, Prun and Pruden agree the key is improving the appearance of downtown is to gain property owners’ cooperation.

Topped officials should also understand that, as the city grows, the business center moves and historic business districts, such as downtown Main Street and New Town, may evolve into something else, Prun said.

Pruden, who is running for a fourth term, added the council has been able to make several improvements to help people move to the downtown business district, including the organization of the Downtown Alliance of Businesses, the introduction of flowerpots and benches, the renovation of Tooele City Park located two blocks west of Main Street; and the renovation of a couple dozen structures.

“The truth of the matter is that some of these owners live out of town and after making repeated contacts with them, we found that they were not interested in improving their properties. They were much more concerned with other issues (as a tax write-off),” Prun said.

When asked due to the downtown business.

candidate Jewel Allen said the city needs to be more involved in the economic development of the city.

“I think the prison issue was a wake-up call for the city,” she said.

While there is some vision from the city for economic development, Allen said she thinks that more can be done.

“Sparks and Allen agreed that the planned Main Street reconstruction project in 2013 will be an opportunity for more growth along the city’s main corridor. Sparks said updating the city’s sewer and water infrastructure would be a bonus for future businesses and populations gains.

With the number of city residents expected to keep growing, Jewell Taylor hopes to find ways to incentivize small business growth in Grantsville. While she isn’t sure financial incentives are necessary, Topham said the city should make it easy for businesses to get involved in the city and for people to come into the community.”

Topham and incumbent Scott Stott both mentioned the need for more restaurants.

Stott also said that development of the Main Street corridor will be a responsibility won to get more downtown businesses. New businesses, on the properties between Main and Darfor streets would come to less of an impact by using the existing infrastructure, he said.

“I really like to see the vacant lot inside the town fill up,” Stott said.

Incumbent Neil Critchlow said he wants to see more manufacturing jobs and other career-enhancing opportunities to keep residents from having to move every time.

With people moving to new every year, Critchlow said the city needs to have a cohesive vision for its future goals and residents. The city should look for residents for information on what new parks are needed and in determining the needs with the highest volume of traffic, he said.

“I would like to see more input

1000 North and Main Street was motivated by a desire driven by a major retail center, which several citizens have asked council members to do.

When asked why he believed he should be re-elected, he said, “I enjoy helping and working with the community and talking with the citizens about the direction they would like the city to go in. We want people in Tooele to feel safe, live, drive, and shop without having to try and travel through a ‘hot’ community.”

Pruden said the use of RDA funds to reserve properties for future development is appropriate. He said RDA funds help Tooele compete with larger cities to incentivize new business enterprises and the practice of purchasing properties to reserve them for development gives the city more control over the size and shape of growth.

When asked why he should be re-elected, Prun said his experience growing up in a rural community gave him a perspective no other candidate has. For example, he remembers when the shops on downtown Main Street were all rowdy residents had for local shopping, space had to be taken on additional businesses and the process work for the benefit of the whole community, they buy in,” he said.

Since agreed that the city’s strong traditions should be considered a selling point in attracting new growth to Grantsville.

“Once they come here and see Grantsville, they want to be a part of it,” he said.

Allen, who was born in Grantsville 14 years ago, said it’s important to enhance and strengthen the city’s historic district but said new people bring with them new ideas and benefits to the community.

Topham said agreed that the city’s heritage and historic sites should be preserved, but believes modern buildings like the library bring value to the community also.

“About the people, not the process,” he added.

Preserving open spaces is a key part of maintaining the feel of Grantsville as a rural community, Critchlow said. Farms on Willow and Pear streets, for example, should be maintained as the city grows, he said.

“We need to maintain the atmosphere as much as we can,” he said.

public safety impact fee of $122 for every new single-family residence and $396 for a 2,499-square-foot house. The new rate is $3.50 per $100 of assessed valuation, and the tax impact fee of $1,500 would be collected for each new single-family residence and $6,000 for each new multi-family unit.

Impact fees are a one-time fee. They are only collected from new development, not existing residences and businesses. They are designed to pay the cost of public facilities required to maintain the current level of service for new development.

Prior to the adoption of the impact fee, Tingey, Tingey, Tooele County deputy clerk auditor, presided over a facilities plan and an impact fee analysis for each proposed fee.

Impact fees may not be used to pay for salaries, operating costs, routine maintenance, increased payroll or other non-facility purposes.

The impact fee is necessary to pay for the cost of facility projects needed to maintain the current level of service and to recover the cost of facilities from which new growth will benefit.

The impact fee analysis looks at past spending and projected future spending to determine the appropriate per-unit impact fee.

Park, recreation and trails impact fees are determined by looking at past per capita spending on these facilities to determine the appropriate minimum level of service in the future, including projected growth.

The public safety impact fee takes a look at the cost per call for sheriff’s office response and the average call per residential and non-residential unit.

Only calls to private residential and private non-residential properties are used to determine the public safety impact fee.

Traffic calls and calls to public property are not included in the costs used to determine public safety impact fees, Tingey said.

In Tooele County, most of the past spending for parks, recreation, and trail facilities has been spent on Deseret Peak Campground, the county’s trails and canyons, and the Hermon Road. County officials expect minimal growth in these areas.

While the majority of impact fees are used to pay for bond payments for these facilities, the impact fee will also cover other costs that were used on these expenses in the past, she said.

As well as past spending determines the amount of impact fees, it does not dictate how impact fees can be spent in the future, Tingey said.

Just because in the past the majority of parks and recreation money for the county went to the Deseret Peak Campground, that does not mean the program can only collect fees from unincorporated areas.

Tooele County does collect a parks and recreation impact fee of $126.90 for single-family residences and $1,059 for multi-family units.

Impact fees are not used for operating expenses. They must be kept in a separate fund with documentation required to show that expenses meet specific legal requirements for each type of impact fee.

65 Utah towns, cities canceling local elections this year

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — In 65 cities across Utah, local officials have canceled municipal elections this year because there was nothing to vote for.

The cities and towns are taking advantage of a 2011 law allowing them to scrap the process if candidates are unopposed and there are no citywide ballot propositions.

Dozens of cities have taken advantage of it in each local election year, Justin Lee, Utah’s deputy director of elections, said Tuesday.

The 65 cities are mostly small communities, with only a few hundred or thousand residents, and represent about a quarter of Utah’s cities and towns.

It’s unclear why so few candidates are stepping forward, but elections and local political officials say it may be a mix of residents happy with the way things are going and little desire to spend the time and money running and holding local public office.

“We certainly prefer that no elections got canceled and that everybody’s participating,” Lee said, saying it’s generally better for the political process.

Bart Anderson, chairman of the Davis County Republican Party, said people may be reluctant to step forward and run because of the cost of running a campaign and lost wages when stepping away from private sector work.

Because city elections are nonpartisan, Anderson said his local party generally doesn’t pay close attention or recruit candidates for those offices.

Anderson said he does worry that canceled elections could hurt party efforts to stir enthusiasm and get people to vote.

The 2011 law was passed at the request of cities and towns who said they were spending money to hold elections with a predetermined outcome, Lee said.

The law means write-in candidates can no longer wait for voters to pencil their names in on Election Day. Instead, Utah now requires a candidate who failed to make the ballot to declare themselves as a write-in candidate at least 60 days before the election.

One of the largest cities to cancel this year was the northern Utah city of Bountiful, with a population of about 43,000 people.

Four candidates were running for three city council seats, but one dropped out in September, leaving three incumbents running unopposed.

“It depends on the different issues going on in the cities,” Davis County Elections Manager Brian McKenzie said.

In the nearby city of Kaysville, which has about 29,000 residents, the city held a primary this year after eight candidates ran for three council seats. The relatively crowded races came on the heels of a 98.6 percent property tax hike to pay for a new police station and other projects.

Bountiful City Recorder Shawna Andrus said she doesn’t know why so few candidates stepped forward this year, and it’s certainly not typical for the city. In past years, they’ve had to hold primary elections because they had more than two candidates running for local offices.

The windmill is alive and well

The windmill is different forms across the globe, such as this Dutch style.

If you could name a person, a plant, an object, a place for which you felt a deep emotional bond, chances are you would say something like, “I was born with a love of gardens. I feel that my heart is in my garden.” For others, it could be a car, or a favorite piece of furniture, or even a book. For me, it is the windmill.

I have always been fascinated by windmills. My fascination began when I was very young, perhaps even before I could walk or talk. My parents had a beautiful garden in their back yard, and in that garden there was a large windmill. It was made of wood and had four blades. The base was round and painted white, while the top was painted blue. The windmill was located near the driveway, so I could see it from the house.

As I grew older, my fascination with windmills only increased. I would often spend hours in the garden, watching the windmill turn and wondering how it worked. I would ask my parents questions about it, and they would explain the different parts of the windmill, how it captured the energy of the wind, and how it was used to perform various tasks such as grinding grain or pumping water.

One day, I asked my father if we could build a windmill of our own. He smiled and said, “Why, of course!” And so, we started building our own windmill. We gathered materials from the woods, and I learned how to cut and shape them. We assembled the windmill, and with great pride, I watched as it began to turn in the wind.

Over the years, my windmill has been a source of great joy for me. It has been a reminder of the natural beauty of the world, and of the ingenuity of human beings. I have also been inspired by the windmill as a metaphor for life. Just as the windmill is powered by the wind, so too are we powered by the energy of our environment. And just as the windmill can be a source of energy, so too can we be a source of energy for others, sharing our talents and abilities with the world.

The windmill is not just a piece of art, but also a functional object. It serves an important purpose in our society, as it provides a sustainable source of energy. In today’s world, where energy is becoming increasingly scarce, the windmill can be a symbol of hope and optimism.

In conclusion, the windmill is a symbol of life and energy. It reminds us of the beauty of the natural world, and of the ingenuity of human beings. It is a reminder of the importance of sustainability, and of the need for us to work together to create a better future. So, let us embrace the windmill, and let us be inspired by its beauty and its power.

The windmill is a beautiful thing, and I am grateful to have it in my garden. It is a reminder of the beauty of the world, and of the importance of sustainability. So, let us be inspired by the windmill, and let us work together to create a better future.

Three years later, my windmill was ready for use. I was very proud of it, and I could not wait to see it in action. I turned on the switch, and to my delight, the windmill began to turn in the wind. I was overjoyed, and I ran outside to watch it spin. I felt a sense of accomplishment, and I knew that I had created something truly beautiful.

From that day on, my windmill became a part of my life. It was a constant reminder of the beauty of the world, and of the importance of sustainability. So, let us be inspired by the windmill, and let us work together to create a better future. The windmill is a symbol of hope and optimism, and it is a reminder of the beauty of the natural world.

Beware of scary inhabitants of the investment world

I just a few years, witches, zombies and vampires will be strolling on your house, asking for candy. As in the case of every Halloween, you’ll likely more or less ignore the waves of these adorable creatures. But in other times, such as the 1970s, sometimes you had to watch out for some seemingly scary entities. Here’s how:

• The Hermione Headline-Heads, glaring headlines neatly only any cutting into madness. Whether it’s political squabbles at home, conflicts in the Middle East or the debt crisis in the eurozone, there’s always something happening that’s jeopardizing the stability of the financial market. These fears are often overblown, and the markets have become resilient for decades. In the United States, the most powerful economic engine in the history of the world has offered more to your opportunities as crimes have come and gone.

• The Terrible Tuesday — He’s so angry at the countryside — your neighborhood, local or federal. But whatever their origin, Terrible Tuesdays have one common element: They can’t find their hat stocks or “can’t miss” opportunities. The problem is truly the market. When one market is thriving, it may already be cooling off. All those “can’t miss” opportunities often end in reality. Don’t let fear of — and — seeking a shortcut to instant success. There’s nothing still, stuck with an investment strategy that seems to be your goals, risk tolerance and investment horizon.

• The Scary Season — When the market is down, you probably already have your investment statements. But don’t let a few bad months, or even a bad year, cause you to stuff your money under your mattress. The Dow Jones Industrials has tripled in just the past 10 years. It could pretty quickly, and if you’re out of the market. And don’t panic. In a big market rally, you’ll miss out on some potentially big gains. So, just put those negative statements aside and look back at your investment history over a period of many years — the big picture will no less frightening than yours imagine. • The Fearless Fool — The performance of the financial markets is notoriously hard to predict — but that doesn’t stop a few of folks from trying. And the one to the same error in a whole — predictions about the future of the market are always wrong. But you can always adapt your portfolio, as needed, in response to changing market or economic conditions. And we’ll see where these possibilities just a guess. But these possibilities have worked there. Instead, follow tried and true principles such as diversification, which can help reduce the impact of volatility in your holdings. Moreover, diversification can’t guarantee a profit or protect against loss.

The ghosts and goblins you see on Halloween are unlikely to cause you nightmares. And the various phantoms of the investment world. Don’t let these scare you away from investing.

DEAR DR. ROACH: I am an asthmatic. In the past, I have used an Accuhaler and a Vest, and I often had to use five to six inhaler treatments each 24 hours, I was prescribed 10 mg of prednisone. At that dose or much less than at the high dose used, causes confusion in most, causes thinning and hunger and sure, weakens bones, increases way -- still hasn’t recovered his “big chance to sweep all this from the credits, and he is départ and good news. The children under the carpet will come home to the billboard in his latest film, “Joy,” singing his “lucky stars” Jennifer Lawrence and Bradley Cooper, as well as the legendary Robert De Niro.

Another “Accidental Love” cow-star was Paul Reubens, who, known famously as Pee-Wee Herman. He made a very successful Broadway return in “Pee-Wee’s Playhouse.” Yes, I could mention the I Love Lucy: “I Love Lucy” and “The Big Bang Theory” both aired on television. Whoopie Pies

This Pennsylvania Dutch favorite is not a pie at all but two cakelike rounds of cake with a filling of sweetened cream in between. Our recipe has a marshmallow creme that's reminiscent of the filling used in French cream puffs.

INGREDIENTS

FOR FILLING

6 tablespoons butter or margarine, melted
3/4 cup milk

FOR COOKIES

3/4 cup buttermilk
1 cup all-purpose flour
1/4 teaspoon baking soda
1/4 teaspoon salt
2/3 cup packed dark brown sugar
1/2 cup granulated sugar
2 eggs
1 teaspoon vanilla extract

DIRECTIONS

1. In a medium saucepan, combine 3/4 cup milk and 6 tablespoons butter. Bring to a boil. Remove from the heat; let cool to room temperature.

2. In a large bowl, combine flour, baking soda, and salt. Set aside.

3. In a large bowl, combine brown sugar and 1/2 cup granulated sugar and set aside.

4. In a large bowl, combine eggs and 1/2 cup granulated sugar and beat until light and fluffy. Add brown sugar mixture. Add cooled butter mixture and beat until smooth. Add flour mixture. Stir until combined. Cover and let sit for at least 2 hours or up to overnight.

5. Preheat oven to 400°F. Line two cookie sheets with parchment paper. Scoop about 3 tablespoons of dough onto each parchment paper. Bake for 8 to 9 minutes or until edges turn golden brown. Remove from pan and cool on a wire rack.
