Facility ready for new role in helping the homeless

It’s been empty for 18 months, but Tooele County’s former transitional housing facility is ready for turnover again, a county official says.

The last occupants moved out of the housing facility on First Vine Street in Tooele City in June 2015. That’s when federal regulations tied up funding for operating the housing facility, according to Tooele County Commissioner Myron Barlow.

“These buildings were going to be a facility for people that could stay in the facility,” he said.

The transitional housing facility opened in November 2011 after Tooele County bought the homes from former Tooele City Commissioner John Hansen in April 2011 for $458,570 in HUD grant money.

The 6,796-square-foot homes, once the company homes, are located on lands owned by the Bureau of Land Management, and Utah School and Institutional Trust Lands Administration, and private holdings, according to ADB project manager Chris Robles.

“We are coordinating with landowners to select acceptable methods including back-filling, masonry walls and solar gravel,” Robles said.

Over the years there have been several accidents nationwide involving open mines since our program started in 1982,” he added. “Unfortunately, there have been 11 fatalities since 1982 and several injuries."

Exposing abandoned mines sounds adventurous, but it can also be deadly. For that reason, the Utah Division of Oil, Gas and Mining Abandoned Mine Reclamation (AMR) program plans to close 200 mine openings in the remote southwest corner of Tooele County this spring.

The land is known as the Clifton Hill area and covers 20,405 acres across 94 square miles. Most of the mine shafts are shallow at 20 to 50-foot deep. The mines are located on lands owned by the Bureau of Land Management, and Utah School and Institutional Trust Lands Administration, and private holdings, according to ADB project manager Chris Robles.

“We are coordinating with landowners to select acceptable methods including backfilling, masonry walls and solar gravel,” Robles said.

Nelson’s resolution also requires that when coun-

The resolution also creates a population-based formula for distributing legislative districts among counties that do not have enough population to cre-

Getting It Right

Government study committee needs to broadly represent all of the county

The Tooele County Council of Governments formed the full-county Government Study Committee in the spring of 2014 to study the representation of county residents and recommend a change to the county’s governmental structure if the committee recommends a change.

As explained in last Thursday’s front-page story, “The study committee is in need of more representation and service to the people.”

Spring 2014 for a study to be done on the current three-member county commission structure that broadly represents the county, and is committed to finding the best way to go forward. That proviso still stands.

The study is a huge responsibility, fraught with challenges to conduct and conclude professionally. Yet, Halladay and the rest of the council will find “this task [completing the study] is enormous. I hope we find great people to do it. The county abounds with such citizens who will enthusiastically contribute for the next several months to produce a credible study.”

The councilman said at last week’s meeting, “If the effort is to select a committee that represents the community, then the process must be rigorous and transparent. This is why a study committee was appointed to consider and possibly recommend a change to the county’s governmental structure.”

If the council recommends a change, the people will have the final say. And thankfully, local voters will have the final say if the committee concludes it is needed to improve representation and service to the people.

The overall process, just getting started, may not be known until later this year. And thankfully, local voters will have the final say if the committee recommends a change to the county’s governmental structure.”

The study committee will be made up of citizens who will be chosen at random. May the appointed council members choose well.

Facebook torture case fraught with politics

Facebook torture case fraught with politics

There’s a lot to unpack about the Facebook torture case, but one of the most interesting aspects is how it relates to the current political climate. Facebook’s decision to remove a video showing the torture of a journalist is a reflection of the tension that exists between free speech and the need to protect human rights. The company’s actions are a reminder of the pressure that social media platforms face to balance these competing interests.

The video in question was filmed in Syria and showed a journalist being tortured and killed by members of the Islamic State. The video was shared on Facebook, but the company removed it after receiving complaints from human rights organizations. The decision was made despite the fact that the video was a legitimate news story and was being shared by journalists and human rights activists.

The decision by Facebook to remove the video has sparked a debate about free speech and the responsibility of social media companies to protect human rights. Some have argued that Facebook is censoring content and suppressing free speech, while others have praised the company for its efforts to protect human rights.

In the end, the decision by Facebook to remove the video is a reminder of the complexity of the issues involved. Social media platforms must navigate a delicate balance between free speech and the need to protect human rights, and it is important to consider the broader context in which these decisions are made.

the future rail right-of-way,” said Thatcher.

“Extending TRAX into Tooele County would be very expensive and right now the projected ridership would not be high enough to justify the expense,” he said. “But in the future when the numbers are there and it’s profitable, it would be nice to have the right-of-way already there.”

The Tooele County councilman proposed to move the west side of the current I-80 freeway near Sheep Lane, crossing state Routes 138 and SR-201 near Sheep Lane. Thatcher said this would run parallel to I-80 and be an alternative route for Tooele County. The state Route 36 south of Tooele would be a future freight route, freeing up room for Tooele County aging and creating passenger safety on SR-36, according to Tooele County’s Transportation Plan.

Proponents of the Midvalley Highway claim the route will provide an alternative route in 1-80 for Tooele. The Midvalley Highway will be a $4 billion, long range improvement project. The county’s transportation plan includes the extension of SR-201 that would parallel in 1-80 and connect with 53-36 in Lake Point.

Randy Drysdale wanted to make a unique gift for his brothers-in-law. Something that wasn’t mass-produced. Something that couldn’t be bought off the shelves at Walmart, where he works.

Despite not having much woodworking experience – “I took some woodworking classes in junior high and had a little bit of experience with a lathe in junior high, but nothing really,” he said – he went to work on hand-crafted, cigar-box guitars. That sparked something in Drysdale, who has spent the past four or five years making everything from pens and bottle stoppers to clocks, wooden signs and toy cars in the shop he set up in the garage of his Tooele home.

Originally was just a hobby and it’s just grown,” said Drysdale, who started off with a straight saw and a band saw and has since seen his collection of tools grow. “A lot of the time, the stress reliever is after a normal day. On my days off, I’m good if I can spend three or four hours (in the shop). I spend more than about 10 hours a week.”

Drysdale started off just doing the cigar-box guitars, but Drysdale was encouraged by his brother-in-law to start “turning,” putting a block of wood on a lathe and carving it into a pen, a bottle stopper or the handle of an ice-cream scoop. “My brother-in-law says when you put a piece of wood on the lathe, you have an idea of what you want it to look like, but half the time, something happens when you get it on the lathe, something changes you don’t want a little bit,” Drysdale said. “So you never know what that piece is going to look like until you’ve completely finished with it. A bottle stopper can take an hour to make, while more ornate, detail-oriented projects like a pen can go six to eight weeks, he said.

“There’s a lot of finishing and a lot of shaping in the process,” Drysdale said. Drysdale was encouraged to start displaying and selling his work at local craft shows and bazaars, as well as events like Facebook shops, by friend and fellow crafter Rebecca Lee. A lot of his work also comes via word-of-mouth from friends and family. He also helps other crafters by creating elements that they can add to their own work.

When Drysdale started to get ready for a craft show, he said it can be difficult to figure out how much of each item to make.

“A lot of this stuff is stuff that I’ll do on my own and just say, ‘this is a good item, they might like it,’” he said. “Sometimes it works really good and sometimes you say, ‘This is really just a gamble. Sometimes it’s a gamble. It can become particularly difficult around the holidays, when he’s trying to work ahead to make sure his have enough product to sell. He said he begins working on Christmas ornaments in September in an attempt to keep up with the demand.

“A lot of times, when the holidays are over, it doesn’t feel like a part-time job,” he said. “You try to get everything built up, but you can never plan. Something you hear is that if people are going to want, then they’re going to go crazy for. I had a layered ornament – a Nativity scene – I only made 10 of them to begin with, and I told my wife not to tell people that I knew that they could buy them. She counts went 20 of them. Between her and selling them through shows, I sold 30 or 40 of them over the holidays. Then, I could mass-produce something and think, ‘people are going to love this,’ and it just sits there. You can never tell.”

Toy cars are also popular items. Drysdale said craft shows don’t have many products aimed at children, and Drysdale prices his cars between $5 and $10 to draw in kids. Once their parents buy one for their child, more often than not want another car the next year, he said.

“Just knowing that somebody likes something enough that they’re willing to pay some money to have a piece of it is rewarding,” Drysdale said. “There’s people at work that just come and shop, and they’ll buy 10 or 20 of them and they love the pens. My wife has a lot of her Facebook friends, and that’s a big part of my sales. She’ll tell me how much her friend liked the pen or the seam ripper I made for them. That’s probably the most rewarding thing.”

Drysdale also enjoys tapping into and being a part of Tooele County’s vibrant community through participating in craft shows. He hopes that local residents will become more employed by his business and his fellow crafters. “Even if it’s just me, I like people to buy local,” he said. “If real businesses. Even though I work for a big box more, I like that people still want to shop and spend money on something hand-crafted.”

Dear Donna Pettman,

I am writing to you for the first time since moving to New York from Texas. I am currently in the process of selling my house and have been impressed with the results of your newspaper. I would like to ask you some questions about the real-estate market in New York, particularly in the area where I am living. I am interested in finding out the current trend in home sales, the average price range for homes in my neighborhood, and any other information that might be helpful in determining the best time to sell my property. Additionally, I would like to know if you have any tips or strategies for successfully selling a house in this area, such as how to price my home, how to prepare it for sale, and how to attract potential buyers. I would greatly appreciate any advice or guidance you can provide. Thank you in advance for your assistance.

Sincerely,

DEAR PAWS’ CORNER: I have a 19-month-old cat, Sissy, who loves to chew on plastic shopping bags and other plastic objects. I’m worried that this might be harmful to her. Is there anything I can do to prevent her from chewing on these objects?

Sincerely,

DEAR RAE: Plastic shopping bags make lovely, sturdy budgies when dried and chemically inert. While none of the birds I’ve cared for over the years couldn’t care less about chewing on such things, others were fascinated by crystalline plastic, crumpled and interesting new objects. Now, I can’t exactly explain why a bird picks a specific material to chew on. You should probably take Sissy to the vet for a thorough and diagnostic examination of her new behavior. Often, you can’t distinguish normal behavior, and Sissy may be looking for a little more enrichment in her life. The risk of chewing on plants, of course, is that she might ingest any of it, and that can cause significant problems. A small bit of soft chewing plastic like plastic bags needs no teeth at all, but she’s also chomping on the harder plastic of water bottles or milk jugs, small shards of which can be problematic. In the short-term, I recommend keeping all plastic bags and other soft objects out of Sissy’s reach, and using cat-safe toys that she can’t get her paws or mouth on. If she’s not too much trouble, I hope you’ve got a great little feline friend.

Sincerely,

The forecast temperature for the night was 3 degrees. My spine shivered as I looked at my phone to check the outside temperature. It was colder than usual. I knew it was cold outside. I’d like to see if I can get a couple of space heaters running now before it gets worse. I couldn’t tell for sure, but I think it was freezing cold outside. The outside temperature was below freezing, so I turned on the heater. I’ll have it on for a little while before I go to bed.

When Gajah Mada heard the tales of this giant, he sent his soldiers to see for themselves. He ordered his troops to dig a well with their fists, and so they began to dig. But it was all a ruse. As Kebo Iwa was working, Gajah Mada sent a message to his army to surround the giant. Still, Kebo Iwa continued to work, ignoring the confusion surrounding him. When he was deep under the ground, Gajah Mada instructed his troops to bury Kebo Iwa with rice.

“Yes! The only thing that will weaken me,” Kebo Iwa finally admitted to the chief minister, “is limestone. If you smear my face with the powder of limestone, you may kill me.”

Gajah Mada was amazed to hear this revelation, so he ordered his troops to do just this. Kebo Iwa, his strength already sapped, couldn’t stop the troops as they covered his face in limestone dust.

True to the giant’s words, he became weak, and he was delivered. As he was dying, Gajah Mada whispered, “Please live in peace and goodness to Bali, and please protect my people.”

A cold night, a busted furnace and how to be a genuine giver

I was cold outside. It’s like being in the cold of winter, and the cold is everywhere. It’s so cold that when my cell phone rings, I hardly answer it. My finger is on the cold touch screen, and I barely call the voice of my phone. I didn’t recognize it. On one hand, the cold seems to be so cold that when my cell phone rings, I hardly answer it. Want to know? I was watching her as she washed my clothes. She asked me if I would like to help her. I was watching her as she washed my clothes. She asked me if I would like to help her.

My wife asked me if I would like to help her. I looked at my phone to check the outside temperature. It was below freezing, so I turned on the heater. I’ll have it on for a little while before I go to bed. After he finished, he said, “I can’t tell for sure, but I think it is the computer board. I’ll have to see if I can go one route or another.”

Then he got on his knees and shot a photo of the board with his phone. “I’m amazing how these phones have changed our lives,” Gajah Mada said to me.

“Your idea is to say, ‘You’re a giver!’” I said.

“I was amazed to hear this revelation, so he ordered his troops to do just this. Kebo Iwa, his strength already sapped, couldn’t stop the troops as they covered his face in limestone dust.

And he kept that promise to the island’s inhabitants in peace and good-will. The king of Bali felt relived knowing that Kebo Iwa would not linger threats and bring down the kingdom. He was proud of Kebo Iwa, who had kept his word and provided for his people. Today the people of Bali live happily in the memory of Kebo Iwa with a great sense of pride. If you have enough offerings been made to the statue, you will hear a baby crying in the distance.

Matt Ryan is keeping some special company these days

Well, maybe it’s Tom Brady, Aaron Rodgers and Ben Roethlisberger.

Roethlisberger should be looking over his shoulder. The Atlanta passer is, after all, the All-Pro quarterback who is 3-0 against Brady this season, and who has led his team to victories in the biggest plays of the game.

The two also have a bond that goes beyond their playing styles.

“Talk to guys in the locker room, and that’s one of the biggest plays of the game,” said Matt Ryan, the Atlanta Falcons quarterback.

When the conference championships are won in the biggest plays of the game. That’s one of the biggest plays of the game. That’s one of the biggest plays of the game. It’s a magical season, in which he led the most pressurized games. Not only has he led the most pressurized games, but he has also led the most pressurized games. Not only has he led the most pressurized games, but he has also led the most pressurized games. Not only has he led the most pressurized games, but he has also led the most pressurized games.

“Just thinking about the conference championships as yet again, Ryan holds the edge on Brady before likely heading into the Super Bowl,” said right tackle Ryan Cloward, who might have an edge on the show before likely heading for him.”

Pretty cool to be a part of it. And it’s been fun to watch. Forget the touchdowns, the Super Bowl, and the world titles. It’s been fun to watch. Forget the touchdowns, the Super Bowl, and the world titles. It’s been fun to watch. Forget the touchdowns, the Super Bowl, and the world titles.

Roethlisberger has gone three seasons without a Super Bowl title. He’s an incredible player, pretty cool to be a part of it. And it’s been fun to watch. Forget the touchdowns, the Super Bowl, and the world titles.
