New machine helps with ballot count

MBV 1000 to provide electronic voter signature verification for this year’s municipal primary

TIM GILLIE

It’s called the MBV 1000 and it can process up to 100 returns ballot envelopes per minute. It scans the voter ID barcode and captures the voter’s signature for analysis by advanced signature recognition technology.

This year’s municipal primary election is the maiden voyage for the MBV — mail ballot voting — in Tooele County. The 2019 election is the first municipal election in the county to be conducted by mail. The 2018 primary election, which included county offices, was conducted by mail.

The MBV was part of the new equipment purchased by the county in 2018 when it made the switch to voting by mail. But the device was not ready to be used in the 2018 election. The match in voting by mail was made for several reasons, according to Tooele County Clerk Martha Gillette.

Almost half of the county was already voting by mail and most other counties in Utah were also already voting by mail, according to Gillette.

Tooele County decided to join with the other counties in purchasing new equipment for counting vote by mail ballots instead of spending money replacing the old voting machines, Gillette said.

$2.3M solid waste fund transfer

Tooele City Council approves $2.3M solid waste fund transfer

STEVE HOWE

The Tooele City Council approved a $2.3 million transfer from its solid waste fund to the capital projects fund during its meeting last Wednesday.

Included in the transfer amount was $500,000 toward interior furnishing and equipment for the new police station. The city’s $9 million loan through the state’s Permanent Community Impact Fund Board to build the police station can’t be used toward interior furnishing and equipment. The transfer is also earmarked to cover the cost of four new snowplows, expected to be approximately $950,000, and airspace for the Tooele City Fire Department.

The city’s exceptions are up and in need of replacement, according to Tooele City Public Works Director Steve Broadhead.

A structure to store fire department apparatus on 1000 North was also discussed by the City Council during the 7 p.m. work session last Wednesday, but more discussion was requested by Tooele City Fire Chief Rick Herrman.

Enough with violent white supremacists

The anger of white supremacists, and the tactics they use, aren’t new. Whether it was the Ku Klux Klan of the 1920s, the modern-day neo-Nazis of the 1980s, or the white supremacists of today, the tactics haven’t changed much. They use violence, intimidation, and propaganda to spread their message and gain support. But what has changed is the ease with which they can spread their message and reach new audiences.

In the past, white supremacists had to rely on local newspapers and radio stations to spread their message. Today, they can use social media platforms like Twitter and Facebook to reach millions of people at once. They can also use websites and blogs to reach a larger audience.

The rise of white supremacists is a sign of the times. The Trump administration has been supportive of them, and the media has failed to hold them accountable. This has allowed them to gain even more support and influence.

The solution is not to ignore them, but to confront them head-on. We need to speak out against their rhetoric and their actions. We need to stand up against racism and hate.

The government needs to take action too. They need to prosecute white supremacists and stop them from spreading their message.

We need to remember that hate is never the answer. We need to work together to create a society that is free from hate and racism.
MATTERS OF FAITH

Truly loving your neighbor is not about turning away when they sin

Jon McCartney
The Federalist

In the case of Jesus’ quote, “You shall love the Lord your God with all your heart, and with all your soul, and with all your might, and with all your strength,” we recognize that this is a commandment intended to guide our relationship with our fellow man. But what about those moral and ethical crises that push our neighbor to their limits? How are we to respond?

The most common response to moral dilemmas is to turn the other way, not to let the other person’s bad behavior affect us. Yet the Bible speaks otherwise.

We are to love our neighbor as ourselves, as Jesus clearly taught. This is the commandment Jesus mentioned in a well-known passage in Mark 12:29: “Love the Lord your God with all your heart, and with all your soul, and with all your mind, and with all your strength.”

Jesus is not saying to let our neighbor do as they will, but to love them as we would love ourselves. It is not just a supernatural commandment, but also a commandment of wisdom and reason.

But how many times have you heard that as an excuse for your neighbor's actions and your own? And how many times have you seen those who are so eager to judge others, while making no effort to love them?

Certainly, we are called to love the Lord with all our heart, soul, and strength. But we are also called to love our neighbor as ourselves. That may mean being honest with our neighbor about their wrongdoings, even when it is not easy.

A year ago, Liam England, 11, put his family lawn mower in the back of the car and his mother drove him to his grandmother’s house where he mowed the lawn.

“She has a normal, just push mower like it’s really hard,” Liam said. “So we just folded the lawn mower up and put it in the back. Then we drove over there.”

Now there were only 49 lawns left for Liam to turn in to complete Rodney Smith Jr.’s 50 Yard Challenge. Liam’s father inspired him to join.

“My dad just said, ‘Hey, there’s this 50 Yard Challenge. Do you want to do it?’” Liam said. “I just went, ‘Sure.’”

Smith, a Bermudian attending college in Alabama, felt God called him to serve those who are free from the typical single mower, the disabled, and veterans when he saw an elderly man struggling to mow his lawn and he stopped and helped in 2015, according to CNN. Famously, he traveled to every state mowing lawns.

Then Smith created the 50 Yard Challenge to get young people involved in their communities because he couldn’t mow all the lawns.

Liam England (front) with his siblings Peyton and Mishay England have all taken the 50 Yard Challenge.

Problems with impossible angles can change with a new view

The sky was a bright blue. Once the sun was high in the sky, the air was warm, and we were ready to get our wings in motion. "Let’s go to that place we’ve never been over terrain like this," she said as we looked at a trail that wound through the Stansbury Mountains with the sun. "Can we go up that?" Kilee asked as we looked at a crevasse, punctuated by large boulders and marked by route signs. I could feel my heart pounding as we began to crawl forward. We were well rewarded by her sharp gaze, which spotted a hidden opportunity, "The earth is higher than me," she said. "I didn’t answer. I simply kept the machine on a steady ascent and wrestled with impossible angles."

The two children did not know that writing down goals makes something that you are passionate about come true. John and Grace had promised to take their two children on a cross-country trip, but they were still challenging and new to the world of travel. "I don’t want to disappoint my children," John wrote. "And I didn’t want to uproot the family’s dream of a new home justifies the means, but my children will be disappointed. Breaking county ordinances with whatever fine ensues."

Joining the family in being an overachiever, Priyanka Chopra Jonas, winner of the G2 Overachievers Student 2018 G2 Overachievers Student project. You can get inspired to know where a hidden talent lies or start a new club. You never know, you might find something really fun and worthwhile together. Then we started to make our way back down. While on our trip, I was a little more relaxed about the impossible angles we both knew were unnecessary. "You get to sit on the scary part," I reminded him. "It’s exciting!" he said with his arms wide open.

Over the course of our trip, we learned that writing down goals makes something that you are passionate about come true. Whether you’re going above and beyond their daily responsibilities to bet- ter yourself, or household could have no more problem, and is a managing broker for a real estate company.

Liam England mows the lawn of his home in Stansbury. Liam England has mowed lawns of nearby neighbors — including his lawn mower to homes that were up to three blocks away.
