Water line break causes dry taps in Tooele area

Residents along 700 South affected for six hours by break that started Sunday afternoon

STEVE HOWE

A water line break left residents along 700 South in Tooele City without water for several hours on Sunday. The break was reported by Tooele City through its Facebook account around 4:30 p.m., as a precautionary measure. The break affected residents along 700 South between Coleman Street and 780 West area, with an early estimate of up to 12 hours without water. By 11:30 p.m., the City announced the line was repaired and water had been restored for residents in the affected area through another Facebook post. Residents were advised to run water through their faucets until it appeared clear, then through the remaining faucets in the home, as sediment could appear in the lines, discoloring it. The cause of the water main break is still being looked into, according to Steve Evans, Tooele City’s public works director. The City’s engineer, Paul Hansen, had not had a chance to look at the pipe as of Monday afternoon.

While there is no final cost estimate yet on the damage from the water main break, Evans and Hansen estimates more than $25,000 for the road repair alone. With additional costs for parts, labor, equipment and materials, the break will likely reach $50,000 to $75,000.

There are a number of ways a water line can break, depending on factors including ways a water line can break, depending on factors including:

- Damaged or aging water line
- Buried utility damage
- Tree roots or soil erosion
- Underground construction
- Improper installation
- Corrosion or deterioration
- Vandalism or第三方 interference

These factors can cause a sudden loss of water pressure, leading to dry taps in the affected area.

Tooele County, wanted to learn here is the district was going to make sure that costs were controlled.

“Who’s going to go through the plan and make sure we aren’t designing and using materials that add to the cost but don’t make the education or teaching any better?” he said.

The school district’s operations manager, along with the school board, which ultimately approves bids and contracts, will make sure that plans are efficient and cost effective, was the answer.

Another question asked at the Grantsville meeting was if the bond is needed as one of the arguments for funding for new schools. Now, why isn’t the district planning or muting all of the new schools immediately after the bond passes?

Part of the reason is that the breaks will be strategically

Deadline for submissions is October 1, 2019.

For more information, visit the Utah Department of Natural Resources website or contact your local office.

The winning posters will be displayed at the 2019 state radar poster contest award ceremony, and will be featured on the Radar website.

ATVs to be allowed on some roads in Utah’s 5 national parks

The National Park Service announced that it will allow off-highway vehicles (OHVs) on certain roads in five national parks in Utah. The decision is part of the agency’s effort to maintain a balance between the needs of visitors and the need to protect the natural and cultural resources of the parks.

The five national parks where OHVs will be allowed are:
- Canyonlands National Park
- Arches National Park
- Bryce National Park
- Canyon de Chelly National Monument
- Capitol Reef National Park

The decision was made after extensive public involvement and consultation with stakeholders.

The National Park Service will continue to monitor the impact of OHVs on the parks and will adjust the rules as necessary.

For more information, visit the National Park Service website or contact your local office.

Controversial wild horse plan heads to Senate floor

The controversial wild horse management plan is being introduced in the Senate floor. The plan has been a topic of debate for many years and has been the subject of many protests and court cases.

The plan aims to reduce the wild horse population in the United States by allowing the Bureau of Land Management to conduct roundups and use various methods to control the numbers.

Opponents of the plan argue that it is inhumane and unsustainable, while proponents argue that it is necessary to protect the natural resources of the country.

For more information, visit the Bureau of Land Management website or contact your local office.

Dear editor,

I have been following your paper since my early childhood. My grandfather used to read the newspaper every morning and share his thoughts with me. I've missed his company since he passed away last year. However, I still follow your newspaper because it is the only one that provides me with the latest news and information. I would like to ask you if you have any plans to expand your coverage to other countries. I would be happy to contribute articles to your newspaper if you are interested.

Sincerely,

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

No, don't listen to Greta Thunberg

G reta Thunberg needs to go right.

She is a prominent celebrity who is a global icon, and her opinions are widely respected. However, I believe that she is wrong about the issue she is discussing. Her views are not based on any scientific evidence, and they are not supported by experts in the field.

It is important to listen to all sides of the story and consider the facts before making a decision. I urge you to listen to the voices of scientists and experts who have studied this issue in detail. Only then can we make an informed decision about what actions to take.

Sincerely,

issued over a three-year period, $50 million one year, $70 million the next, and then $90 million. This allows the new bonds to replace old bonds that will be paid off, keeping the tax rate lowest that the bonds were issued all at the same time. Bonds language, as requested by the Bond Committee, is required to specify any reserve for current bonds that may become overdue. The property tax rate impact of $10 million in new bonds over a 20-year period for the current average home school at $225,000 would be $396 annually. The cost for a home's property tax impact for the owner of a $250,000 home would be $328 annually, or $10.75 monthly. A new annual property tax impact for a buyer of the same value would be $233.

As of the Oct. 1 enrollment count, Stansbury High School was 527 over its ideal capacity and Tooele High School was 467 students over its ideal capacity. The public will have more opportunity to comment on the school districts’ bond plans at the Oct. 8 school board meeting at the school district office, 92 Lodestar Way in Tooele City at 7 p.m.

Everyone has their own challenges in life. The trick to overcoming those challenges is teamwork — and persistence. That’s what Mike and McKenzi Terry believe.

McKenzi’s sister left behind two daughters, ages 10 and four. When she died, there was no question where the two girls would go. Mike and McKenzi adopted them.

At the time, the couple lived in Saratoga Springs. Mike was in the middle of applying to the Utah Highway Patrol.

“I had just finished the medical portion of it (the application) and we were starting to head to the U of U,” he said. “My grandma was going to die and we were going to tell him goodbye. We got the call on our way to the hospital that Kenzi’s sister had died.”

The Terrys experienced some major life changes. First, they brought McKenzi’s four-year-old niece Ren to live with them and began caring for her full time. About the same time, Mike and McKenzi adopted the two daughters.

MONDAY’S WARM COCOA

Living by nature’s many examples offers a rewarding way to live.

I was early in the morning and I was lying in bed, and the sun was shining through the window right up to my face. The blanket was pulled up to my chin, and the cool air that had crept into our house the night before was no longer there. It was almost still outside, a perfect morning.

“Love to listen to the rain,” I thought as I looked out the window at the blankets just that much tighter against my skin. I lay there, listening, the drizzling sound a deep, memory and awareness.

“When the rain falls, it falls—on the whole field!” Dr. Pepper.

With the rain so heavy, I decided to sit up and try a bit of a cookout. My favorite thing to do on my own is my mind—despite the message from the sun. It was almost still.

M

THE RIGHT THING

Correcting a case of mistaken identity

M any of us have found ourselves in awkward settings in which we’ve been approached by someone who seems to know us but who we actually know nothing about.

The latter regularly occurs when approached by the street by an older peddler woman. She is using familiarity to try to sell us the same product. She is a famous motif. Before identifying a name, it’s fair game to choose whether to deal with her or not. You retain your right to simply carry on the conversation. In the case of the soliciting peddler, it’s up to you to stop and chat or politely walk by.

This makes us call Robbie. Sometimes the person with whom you’re speaking is someone else at the company. It takes a while for him to figure out what the person he’s talking to is trying to do. Correcting the mistake is too late in most cases. We used to do things to a colleague. Correcting the mistake would have taken on as much responsibility as deciding the outcome of the system. We let her know what she has done.

Second, Robbie ran the risk of having the person discover his mistake from someone else at the company and having her second wonder what kind of person they were and then realize that they were someone else at the company. It takes a while for him to figure out what the person he’s talking to is trying to do. Correcting the mistake is too late in most cases. We used to do things to a colleague.

Parents create a helicopter commute for sons

Dear Amy: Our seventh-grade son, who bicycles every day about a mile to school, has decided he doesn’t want his father to cycle with him. We’ve encouraged him, but he just won’t do it. He likes to cycle alone. What can we do to accommodate him?

— Mr. & Mrs. M. of Phoenix

Dear Mr. & Mrs. M.: I wrote a column about children’s schedules and I called it “The Cult of the Marathon Child.” I’ve come to realize that the problem doesn’t begin at the marathon level but at the preschool level, where it’s called “The Cult of the Minion Child.”

So it’s not unusual for children to be hyper-vigilant about controlling their own lives. They may not consider that you are doing something for their benefit. They may be quite sure your motives are selfish and unselfish.

I think it’s important to try to get your son to understand why you’re doing what you’re doing, as much as possible. You can also try to make it a family project. If you’re having a hard time getting your son to buy in, you might buy in to public transportation for yourself and see if your son will follow. Are you doing a substitute? — Amy Dickinson

Deborah Risi’s Mindset

A Whole New Model for Urban Life

The two simultaneous events offer a stark contrast. Prognosticators omnipresently continue to create new possibilities, while municipal politicians scramble to thwart those possibilities.

This is the growing gig economy and the entrepreneur who enable them—agents of the possible.” — Charles Haynes, The Atlantic

Pink also saw “companies tap freelancers for a model of innovation that allows them to retain control while also reducing costs.”

In 2003, Pink had worked as a consultant to the World Health Organization. Since then, she has been a tireless advocate for the value of work and creativity.

She has written several books, including "Drive: The Surprising Truth About What Motivates Us," which explores why people work and what motivates them.

In her latest book, "To Be a Man: The Surprising Science of the Gender Gap and What We Can Do About It," Pink takes a closer look at the gender gap and what can be done about it.

house and move on with our move; get the girls out of that opportunity to rent their house her. Mike and McKenzi had the in Tooele — decided to move in Mike's parents — who also live years living in the basement, smoother transition.”

“We decided it was time to yank them out of the were able to keep the two girls helping with Ren and taking care of them. “Last night I was just kind of thinking back to when I was in high school, going to bed. I would always think about what was the point of being in this world. I remember specifically sitting in my room wondering, ‘Who am I going to marry one day? What's life going to be like when I'm in my thirties?' And I just kind of felt like things are really good here it is.'” McKenzi said.

McKenzi runs a LuLaRoe cloth- as a highway patrol trooper, busy. In addition to Mike's job struggles and we just have to are a special bond he had with McKenzi is also grateful for the strong support system her family has in Tooele. “We wouldn't be able to do it without our family and friends,” she said. “We're grateful for all the support we've received. If Mike and McKenzi have enjoyed watching their children grow closer together over the years — all of them. “We're open with them about the adoption,” McKenzi said. “It's just a neat thing (how) they're all so close as much as kids. It's just been really fun to see how much they've grown up and related in each other and become such close children. It's definitely taken a while, but we feel like things are really good now.”
